4. Spread of Global Crises

Because countries are highly interconnected, problems in one region can quickly affect the rest of the world. Example: The 2008 Global Financial Crisis spread rapidly across international markets, causing unemployment and economic instability in many countries.

Conclusion

Globalization has played a major role in shaping global peace and security. On the one hand, it promotes economic cooperation, cultural understanding, and collective action against common threats. On the other hand, it can facilitate terrorism, cybercrime, economic inequality, and the rapid spread of global crises. Therefore, governments and international organizations must work together to maximize the benefits of globalization while addressing its security challenges.
